

Dear Mr. Chandler

JUN 28 2010

God Bless you for your work in representing the community. Daniel & I are very pleased about the forward movement on this issue.

I have a thought that I feel is pertinent: During the recent oil debacle on the <sup>Gulf</sup> coast one of most serious failures in the clean up was bureaucratic confusion RED tape concerning "appropriate agency permits" (the last 3 words under "Next steps in Clean up"). May I respectfully suggest that you make a point to use the red tape debacle that has so impeded forward action in the Gulf to instill an urgency in agency permitting processes. Example: Fish & Game has been aware of the trash, tubing, and chemical problem in the water courses (in a significant way) since Jan. 2006 and has yet to lift a finger to resolve the problem. If they have to count frogs or whatever before permitting this "proposed cleanup" how many years (considering the above example) will it take to actually implement any actual work?

Will the proactive action by the water board be stifled for 1, 2, 3, maybe 4 years until it becomes a reactive configuration?

Hopefully clear heads, considering the red tape mess in the Gulf, can put aside sluggishly disfunctionality and realize that time is of the essence. The weather of the Creator respects no mans lax/dazyical attitude. Lets "Get it done!"

Thank you Sir for considering
my thoughts

Sincerely
Ralph B. [unclear]
