

* Hydrogeologically Vulnerable Areas are where published studies show geologic conditions are more likely to allow surface contaminants to move to groundwater through percolation; for example: areas without an aquitard. Vulnerable areas not mapped, due to their extensiveness, are fractured rock where contaminants can move directly to water.