No, they don't plan on producing any retroactive fingerprints, they will move forward with the new ones.

You say... will begin producing the fingerprints again in January. Will the runs from June through December also be run?

I just talked to the modeler working on the improvements and he told me that he is currently testing his updates and that he thinks that they will begin producing the fingerprints again in January. The improvements are based on overall performance and not related to the drought barrier.

Mark,

Thanks for the quick response. Do you know roughly when they may be available? And do you know if the improvements in model accuracy are related to the installation of False River barrier?

Thanks, Les

Hi Les,

The modeling group that produces the fingerprints is currently working to improve the models accuracy. Unfortunately, the May 2015 update was the last one they sent out. As soon as they have completed their modifications and testing, we will begin sending them out again. Sorry for any inconvenience that the lapse has caused.

Mark,

I am having trouble finding the delta fingerprinting graphics that I believe used to be included in the (very handy) RTDF updates. I followed link to archive at...

http://www.water.ca.gov/waterquality/drinkingwater/public_docs/Archive%20Delta%20Fingerprints/

But the last one is for May 2015. Can you direct me to where I can find them for the last few months?

Thanks, Les
